Product Description

Product Description:

Air-Cooled Condenser

The Air-Cooled Condenser is a type of radiating facility that is typically used in conjunction with cooling equipment. It is capable of transferring heat from the refrigerant to the air. There are three types of air-cooled condensers available, including the H, V, and U. The H-type is designed to blow air from the side, while V and U types blow air from the roof.

Furthermore, the air-cooled condenser boasts a reasonable structure and excellent interchangeability, enabling it to be paired with a variety of compressors. It can be customized to meet the individual requirements of different customers, with the window fin being an ideal choice for many applications.
