Applications:

Cold storage warehouses are facilities designed to preserve and store various perishable items such as fruits, vegetables, meats, and seafood. These warehouses are equipped with temperature-controlled environments to maintain the freshness and quality of the stored products.

Walk-in freezers and chillers are essential components of cold storage facilities. These units provide a controlled environment with low temperatures to ensure the proper preservation of items that require frozen or chilled storage.

Food processing and preservation facilities play a critical role in the food industry by processing and storing perishable food items. These facilities are equipped with specialized machinery and equipment to handle various food processing activities and maintain the quality and safety of the products.

Pharmaceutical storage rooms are designed to store drugs, vaccines, and other pharmaceutical products at specific temperature and humidity levels. These specialized storage rooms are essential for maintaining the potency and effectiveness of medications.

Fruit, vegetable, meat, and seafood storage require different temperature and humidity conditions to ensure the freshness and longevity of the products. Cold storage facilities are equipped with separate storage areas to accommodate the specific needs of each type of perishable item.
